Description:

Programs For Troubled Teens is one of the leading therapeutic resources for families and teens seeking help for emotional, behavioral, and psychological challenges. A new study on teen attachment was recently published in the Journal of Social and Personal Relationships. Ohio State University researchers Nathan Silver and Michael Slater conducted the study. The researchers found, People with attachment issues are more likely than others to be engaged in the stories. They feel connected to the fictional characters and think about what they would do if they were in the same situations.
