Description:

Alzheimers disease is a progressive neurological condition associated clinically with increasing difficulties with recent memory and recall, difficulties with thinking and changes in behavior. While forgetfulness is often considered a normal symptom of aging, patients with Alzheimers disease have more significant memory loss, which begins to interfere with their overall functioning and activities of daily living. The Alzheimers Research and Treatment Center at Neurological Associates of Albany, under the direction of Dr. Richard Holub and the full neurological team, offers evaluation and treatment for Alzheimers disease and other memory disorders.
